The 2010 IEEE International Conference on Robotics and Biomimetics (ROBIO2010) is to provide a forum for researchers in the interdisciplinary areas of robotics and biomimetics to disseminate their latest research results. The theme of ROBIO2010 is "Robotics and Biomimetics for Human Science and Engineering".

The ROBIO2010 will be held in Tianjin, one of China's four municipalities directly under the State Council. Tianjin is a major international harbour on the western shore of the Pacific and the northern extremity of the Bohai Bay, and a gateway to Beijing 120 km away. Tianjin has defined its overall aim in national economic and social development, and one of China's earliest modernized regions, the center of commerce, trade and finance in North China, a comprehensive industrial base of advanced technology and a modernized international seaport metropolis opening in all directions. Tianjin is not only a venerated settlement but also a thriving modern cultural city.
